BRAD McMILLAN — MONEY, DECISIONS + YOUR FUTURE

Questions · Financial Judgment · Habits · Action

ESSENTIAL QUESTION

How can better financial questions and decisions give me more control over my future?

THIS WEEK

Last week, you experienced what a $45,000 salary can actually feel like when real-life expenses, tradeoffs and unexpected events are added.

This week, you will learn from a financial professional.

Your job is not to collect random advice.

Your job is to:

- bring real questions from your Week 6 experience
- listen for ideas that challenge your assumptions
- connect advice to your own decisions
- ask follow-up questions
- decide what applies to you now
- identify what still needs verification

- leave with one action you can use

CAPSTONE CONNECTION

Keep:

- your strongest financial question
- one belief that changed
- one financial principle
- one decision you reconsidered
- one money rule

- one financial goal
- one person who influenced your thinking
- one action you chose because of the experience

The goal is not to become a financial expert in one week.

The goal is to become someone who asks better questions, understands consequences and makes more intentional decisions.
